RHYOLITE, Nev., April 23.—A message from Skidoo says that a number of citizens overpowered the guard at the jail, secured Joe Simpson, who shot and killed James Arnold, a prominent merchant, and ushered him into eternity by means of a rope over a telegraph pole. The citizens of Skidoo, on the evening of the murder, had attempted a lynching, but desisted owing to the officers pleading with them to allow the law to take its course. The story of the crime is as follows: Simpson, who is generally regarded as having been a tough character, had been drinking, and entered the store of Arnold, pulled a revolver and deliberately shot him to death for some fancied wrong. Simpson was immediately arrested.
A short time ago an attempt was made to blow up the Skidoo mine, and Simpson was supposed to have had a hand in the affair. James Arnold was a well known and highly respected man in this section, having been a justice of the peace, and engaged in mining. At the time of his death he was one of the owners of the Skidoo Mercantile Company. Simpson was a gambler and bore a tough reputation. He was formerly located at Reno.
